Fischer-Wilson Brick and Frame House near Warwick private

c. 1790-1870

Painter's Rest, the tract on which this house stands, has had a long history as a tenant farm. The tract of land which totaled 563 acres along with the early two story Flemish bond brick house with post and beam log kitchen wing was first owned by Charles Henry Fischer, whose brother Sidney George Fischer owned Mount Harmon. In his Mount Harmon 1837-1850 diary he mentions, "Sunday I drove over to Painter's Rest," (p. 4) By the mid 19th century Delawarean William Wilson had acquired this farm while assembling a vast bi-state farm. (HHM 3/245) William Wilson died in August of 1879 and Painter's Rest along with four other farms and property in Warwick was advertised and sold at auction in 1881. (JAD 3/352) The farm at the time was tenanted out to a William Bland and was described in the "Cecil Democrat" with 223 acres and 13 square perches more or less, divided into four fields. The buildings consist of a brick dwelling with two frame attachments, brick meat house, frame granary, and stable.

Fischer-Wilson House

Addenda

Since Paul Touart's survey of the Fischer-Wilson House in 1979, the house has deteriorated and in 1983 is gradually being demolished. In July 1983, the two story frame wing is completely demolished, the south porch of the main house is down, and only the log walls of the post-and-plank kitchen survive. The original brick house remains standing but is scheduled for demolition, with the materials to be salvaged by a Chestertown builder.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE*FISCHER-*

The Wilson House consists of three sections, the first being built around 1790. It is a 2nd story 2 bay by 1 room brick ~~house~~ with a medium sloped tin roof. A single story post and plank section c. 1800 was added to the east gable end and later raised by frame to a two story height. Finally in the third or fourth quarter of the 19th century a 2nd story 2 bay by 1 room hall and parlor frame section was attached to the west end. This latest addition retained the same roof line of the 18th century section, but was supported by a full uncoursed fieldstone basement.

The south facade (main) of the 18th century section is laid in flemish bond and jack arches over the two window openings on each floor. A later central door opening was cut through between the first floor windows. The front sash were also changed to 4/4 divisions with louvered shutters. There is a late 19th century four panel front door. The bed molding and boxed cornice remain intact at eave level.

There are three openings on the first floor of the late 19th century section with an entrance in the eastern bay. The two 4/4 sash are without shutters. The second floor windows have louvered shutters. The boxed cornice continues across evenly with the 18th century section. A five bay single story hip roof porch with tin floor, central gable, and square post stretches across these two sections.

The south facade of the post and plank(kitchen) section is covered with weatherboards but a vertical board sheathing covers the ~~posts and planks~~. The second front is weatherboard over frame. There is a single 2/2 sash and door opening with four panel door on the first floor and two 6/6 sash openings on the second.

Slight boxed cornice covers the rafter ends. The roof is covered with the same tin sheathing.

The east gable end of the main block is primarily covered with the kitchen addition, however, a interior end stack with corbelled cap rises out of the end wall with flanking attic lights. The brick on this end has been stuccoed. The gable end is closed with a plain bargeboard. The east end of the kitchen section has an interior end stack whose cap has been removed. A large base can be seen but stack narrows sharply after the first floor. A small attic light flanks the stove stack.

The north side of the 18th century section is laid in 5 course common bond with another later entrance having been cut through. A single 9/9 sash is located to the east of the entrance and two 9/9 sash are found on the second floor. The box cornice and bed molding ~~are~~ the same as the south side. Evidence of an earlier porch is found at first floor height. Holes in the brick wall were undoubtedly used to support the missing porch. The kitchen has three openings on the first floor with a central entrance and flanking 6/6 sash. Two 6/6 sash are found on the second floor. The north side of

of the late 19th century section has a eastern bay door and 4/4 sash on the first floor and one 4/4 sash on the second.

The west end of the frame section is primarily plain with a stone basement access.

The interior of the 18th century section has been altered with the removal of the northeast corner winder stair and the addition of a straight flight on the west wall. The mantel has been removed from the eastern wall fireplace. Chair rail does remain (see profile) and ovolo banded surrounds frame each window opening. The second floor has also been altered with a partitioning of two small rooms and a northern hall. The winder stair to the attic remains in the northeast corner and evidence of the first floor stair can be seen in a closet in the eastern room. Chair-rail and window surrounds remain the same as the first on the exterior openings. A plain surround frames the later doors. A slight shift in the heavy beaded baseboard is also evident. The plaster has been removed on part of the interior partition and the wall consists of lath and plaster over whitewashed vertical board walls. There is a fireplace in the eastern bedroom but the mantel has been removed. A closet to the south of the fireplace opening does remain with its beaded vertical board door and ovolo molded surround. The hinges are also intact. The winder stair to the attic rises sharply to partially denuded attic space. The wide board flooring has been removed. The roof is supported by a common rafter system with pinned mortise and tenon peak joints and lapped and pinned collar beams. A crude opening was cut through in the west gable end brick wall for access into the attic of the late 19th century addition.

The first floor interior of the post and plank section has remained basically the same with a large cooking fireplace in the east wall with a winder stair in the northeast corner. The post and plank construction is especially evident in this corner. The stair and closet below is enclosed with beaded board doors and the closet door remains with its wrought latch with oval nailer plates. The door and window surrounds are plain. The second floor is divided into three rooms with an attic access through the southeast room. The east end five course common bond brick wall is exposed in the west room. Door and window trim also remains plain.

The late 19th century frame section has very typical interior molded door and window surrounds and four panel doors. The chimney breast protrudes with openings for stove pipes.

The only remaining outbuilding was a squarish common bond brick structure directly north of the house and has been recently demolished for brick salvage.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Wilson House is one of the earliest structures in this lower corner of Cecil County. Although the 18th century structure has suffered numerous and disfiguring alterations, enough is left to realize its earlier appearance and plan. The post and plank kitchen section is not unknown in the area but one of a handful of recognized examples. It has remained basically intact and probably serves as a good example of a early 19th century kitchen. The final late 19th century additions are nothing unusual, but do offer an interesting continuation of the 18th century dwelling.
